 Game

Play hard, scheme freely, wage war — that's the game. What earns sanctions is what poisons the room: profanity and harassment, hate speech, inappropriate names, spam, cheating and multi-accounting.

Reporting

Every chat message, article, comment, profile and party carries a report option. Pick a category, add a note, done — the content is snapshotted at report time, so deleting it later hides nothing.

- Reports go to a human moderation queue. Nothing is punished automatically.
- Once staff has ruled on a piece of content, later reports of that same content inherit the decision instead of reopening the case.
- Deliberately false reports can earn the reporter a warning.

Chat links and previews (12 September 2026)

Paste an article or war link into any chat — global, your language room, your party room, the parliament floor or a war room — and a compact preview card appears under the message: the article's title with its newspaper, likes and comments, or the war's two sides with flags, the contested region and whether it is still active. The card is the link. At most two previews per message. Any other Parliamentum link (a profile, a company, a region) is clickable and opens in a new tab; links to other sites stay plain text.

Every room is moderated the same way. The report flag sits on other players' messages in every room, including the war room and the parliament floor, and staff read all rooms.

Sanctions

Moderators choose from a fixed toolbox; duration options run from 1 hour to permanent:

- Warning — a record entry; repeat offenses climb the ladder.
- Chat mute — silences every chat surface: global and language rooms, party chat, war chat, the parliament floor.
- DM ban — private messages blocked.
- Press ban — no publishing, renaming or commenting.
- Name reset — inappropriate names are replaced with a neutral one.
- Account ban — the door, temporary or permanent.

Every action lands in your record with its reason, and you are notified. A first offense is usually a warning or a short mute; the ladder escalates with repetition within 90 days.

One account per person

Multi-accounting is the one economic sin the desk hunts systematically: side accounts that vote, funnel gold or pad parties distort everyone's game. Detection runs daily and clusters suspicious accounts for human review — registration is never blocked, and no machine issues a punishment. Siblings or roommates who play from the same home can get flagged by accident; if that's you, just say so in a ticket — every case is reviewed by a person.

Appeals

Any sanction can be appealed from a support ticket. Staff can revoke actions, and revocations restore your standing immediately. Honesty helps: players who self-reported a second account and simply stopped using it have kept their main untouched.

TIP

The rules protect the drama, not smother it. Rob the treasury through a law you rammed past a sleeping parliament — legend. Call the mover of that law something unprintable — mute.
